The Birth of Cutter

Cutter was born from Cordell Hicks' lifelong fascination with dragons. As a child, he would spend countless hours drawing and sculpting these mythical creatures, honing his skills until he became known for his ability to capture their essence in his artwork.

In 2016, Hicks decided to create a baby dragon sculpture that would showcase his unique style and technical prowess. He meticulously sculpted Cutter from polymer clay, a versatile material that allowed him to achieve intricate details and delicate textures. The result was a breathtakingly lifelike creature that seemed to possess a soul of its own.

Cutter's Physical Appearance

Cutter is a baby dragon, and his physical appearance reflects his youth and innocence. He is small and agile, with a slender body and short, stubby legs. His eyes are large and expressive, conveying a mixture of curiosity and wonder.

One of the most striking features of Cutter is his tail. Long and whip-like, it is covered in sharp spikes that run all the way from the base to the tip.
