Frankie Poullain's "Dancing in the Darkness" is a hauntingly beautiful ballad that has captivated listeners for decades. It has since been covered by countless artists, including Bruce Springsteen, Jeff Buckley, and the Bangles, and remains a staple of classic rock radio.

The song's lyrics are simple and straightforward, but they paint a vivid picture of a lonely man searching for love and meaning in a dark and uncertain world. The narrator dances in the darkness, hoping to find someone to share his life with, but he is repeatedly disappointed. The song's final verse is particularly poignant, as the narrator realizes that he may never find the love he is looking for:

And I'm hoping for a miracle > But I'm afraid I'll never find it"
