

New Yesterday Tomorrow Network Marketing Journey From Stupidville To Failure: A Cautionary Tale

I'm writing this article to share my personal experience with New Yesterday Tomorrow (NYT), a network marketing company that I believe is a scam. I hope that my story will help others avoid falling victim to similar scams.

I first heard about NYT in 2017. I was looking for a way to make some extra money, and a friend of mine told me about NYT. He said that he was making a lot of money with NYT, and he encouraged me to join.

I was hesitant at first, but I eventually decided to join NYT. I paid the $499 startup fee, and I began attending the company's training webinars.

The training webinars were very persuasive. The speakers talked about how easy it was to make money with NYT. They said that I could make a full-time income by working just a few hours per week.

I was excited about the possibility of making a lot of money with NYT. I started recruiting new members into my downline. I also purchased a lot of NYT products, hoping to increase my earnings.

However, I quickly realized that I was not making any money with NYT. I was spending more money on the company's products and services than I was making in commissions.

I tried to talk to my upline about my concerns, but they just told me to keep working hard. They said that I would eventually start making money if I just stayed persistent.

I continued to work hard for several months, but I still wasn't making any money. I finally realized that NYT was a scam. I quit the company and asked for a refund of my startup fee.

The company refused to give me a refund. They said that I had violated the company's terms of service.

I was devastated. I had lost $499 and a lot of time. I felt like a fool for falling for such a scam.

I'm sharing my story because I don't want others to make the same mistake that I did. NYT is a scam, and you should avoid it at all costs.

Here are some tips on how to avoid falling victim to network marketing scams:

- Do your research before joining any network marketing company.
- Be wary of companies that make unrealistic promises about how much money you can make.
- Don't invest any money in a network marketing company until you've done your research and you're confident that the company is legitimate.
- Be aware of the risks involved in network marketing.
- Don't quit your day job to join a network marketing company.

If you're looking for a way to make some extra money, there are many legitimate options available. Network marketing is not one of them.

I hope that my story has helped you learn more about network marketing scams. If you have any questions, please feel free to leave a comment below.

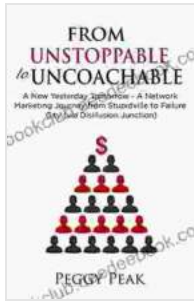

Thank you for reading.

Sincerely,

Your Name
